

Newsletter Vol. 03

This week, Team Cheshire made strides in our concept development, which included client feedback on their objectives and even our own story development.

The week started with an advisor meeting on Monday. We discussed potential storyline, and also motioned to change the meeting day to Wednesdays.

Tuesday's client meeting went well. The students discussed their individual research topics and discussed in detail the historical events that led up to the current debates between privacy and security. On further discussion after class, we revisited some old storyline and hope to revise it and pitch it next week. Similarly, Thursday's client meeting pushed our concept development further as the class discussed classroom objectives, which motivated us to formulate ideas around these items.

Currently, we are trying to solidify our storyline ideas and technology. Next week, we will be presenting our ideas to the class which will hopefully allow us to start prototyping late next week. In addition, we will be taking our team photo, which will be steampunk themed.
