Discovering Nature Through Play

Week in Review

This week was largely concerned with preparing for our halves presentation for Monday. Aside from getting our presentation ready, we've gotten all of the totem icons finished, and are making excellent progress with podium designs. Tech-wise, we've gotten our Scaleform UI up and running, and so far it looks good. We also have a gallery online for the final activity.

In response to feedback from our last playtest, we've added some audio to the spirit stone to describe the chosen animal, and tried to clarify instructions for the second activity.

This morning, we had another playtest, this time at the Carnegie Science Center. This was a great playtest. We had participants from across our target demographic, and our results were overall very positive, though we did find that part of our instructions needed revision.

Client Meeting

Our client meeting was kept very short this week, since Kathleen will be joining us at halves on Monday.

The Coming Week

By the end of next week, we should have at least a draft of every part of our script, all podiums designed (with at least one ordered as a print test).

The current state of our UI.
